WE are glad to be able to state on authority (says the Shanghai Mercury) that the difficulty with the Chinese over the tank oil project has ended satisfactorily to all congerned. The steamer Ilex received permission at noon to-day from the Harbour Master to go alongside her wharf, where she took up her position this afternoon ready for discharging her fluid cargo into the tanks. The permit from the Customs was issued about four o'clock in the siternoon to the agents, Mesers. Arnhold, 100,000 to cover any damage that might be done by the oil escaping, etc., from the tanks. So much for Chinese 'face,' and all ands happily. The happy conclusion of an awkward contretemps is, we understand. largely owing to the anxiety of H.E. Nieh Taotai to meet every reasonable demand and to avoid friction, and the bulk of the work of translating and interpreting the voluminous correspondence between the Chinese authorities and the Foreign officials interested was most ably done by Mr J. W Jamieson of the British Consulate. The Ilex, it is expected, will commence to pump out the oil brought and will probably have her 8000 tons of oil safely deposited in the tanks by breakfast time to-morrow.

It will be noticed that the death rate has gone up from 20.7 in 1892 to 22.7 in 1893 and that the number of deaths registered in 1893 is considerably in excess of these registered in 1892. The principal increase appears under the heads Infantile Convulgive Diseases (270). Bowel Complaints (124), and Other Causes (169).

The decrease in the number of deaths recorded as occurring from fevers, which was referred to in the Superintendent's report of last year, has been equally noticeable in 1893. As the figures and conditions are very similar it may be of interest to repeat here what was stated by the Sanitary Superintendent a veer ago :-

The decrease in the number of deaths recorded as occurring from fevers is deserving of special attention chiefly because of the widely believed theory that soil disturbances even when the soil is practically of a purely mineral character, is the principal actor or rather one of the principal factors in the causation of malarial fevers. During the year under review there has been a very great deal of soil disturbance, more especially in Kowloon, yet the deaths recorded from fevers have been less than usual. It is no doubt true that the number of deaths caused by any particular disease is not a thoroughly reliable index to the number of cases of sickness that may have accurred but it is an index and the only Cemeteries. - The-byo laws which came one which we at present possess so far as into force on 1st January, 1892, have been | the Chinese community is concerned. returns of trade for 1893, and the accom panying valuable report on the foreign trade of China by Mr H .- Kopach .- Statis tical Secretary, offer much material well worth a careful study by all who are in terested in the currency problems of the .It is not my purpose, at present however, to notice more than two or three points out of the many suggested by The attached tabular statements (B) perusal of these reports. The first to which would call attention is, the evidence afforded by the table of exports of native goods to foreign countries, was to the r ative movements of gold and aliver during

> Up to the end of 1892, it was abundantly proved, I think by data compiled here, as well as by tables prepared in Europe, that while silver had remained stationary. as compared with the average values of commodities, gold had appreciated materiallyin fact that the entire divergence between gold and silver had been caused by the ad vance in gold, (Athia, therefore of great interest to ascertain if this state of things continued during 1898, or, if the several acts of legislative interference with the legitimate demand for silver, which occurred during that year, coupled with the additional serious strain put upon gold for currency purposes, caused an absorute decline in th value of silver, or a further appreciation in

This explains the reason whether this divergence has been owing to why commodities and sliver have remained a depreciation in silver, or an appreciation so constant in value, and why silver has in gold, or both combined. At first, and been able to retain its position notwithuntil recently, it was almost universally standing the frequent and persistent attacks accepted as a fact that an actual depreciation in the value of silver was alone which furnishes the strongest element of responsible for the divergence. Lately. however, public opinion has undergone a restored to its former place in the currency radical change on this head, and it has now systems of those countries which have so become a general belief, among the best educated on the subject, that gold has all along been the offending factor.

As gold has advanced, its effect has been to lower the prices of all commodities measured by it, including silver. Therefore, at every upward step in the march of gold, the wholesale prices of commodities, wherever the influence of the gold standard prevails, have declined simultaneously, and pari passu. such a movement in gold has occurred; ex- produced is most natural. Lockyer's Sulpher change on London, which simply represents is the only English Hair Restorer universally the gold value of silver, has declined, and sold. at the same time the commodities against which bills have been drawn have gone down to the same extent, on the home

Hence those who, from time to time, have sought to take advantage of low exchanges by making shipments of produce, have found their expectations frustrated, and all the profit they expected to realise swept away, by a decline in their merchandise on the consuming market, equal to the drop in exchange which induced their shipments. This process has been going on for the past twenty years, and has been, without doubt, the principal element which has rendered the export trade from China an unsatisfactory, on the average, during that

From this it will be seen :---1. That the price of silk in Shanghai for the past & months has remained practicelly unchanged, and now stands at the same tael coat as in July last. 2. That the price in Londin has in the meantime declined 20 r cent, or to the same extent as the fall in exchange, and the navance in the cost of gold. And it will readily be understood that, so far as shy reduction in the rate of exchange is concerned, there has been absolutely no futhese at a tratever for shipments of produce from China to the gold standard countries, and there will not be any such inducement as long as gold continues to appropries, and silver does not depreniate. This, & think will explain why not withstanding the copy tinued decline in exchange, there has not exchange, and sell their merchandise at a reduction in price of 20 percent; it, is easy to see that the operation offers no inducement for renetition. When, if ever, silver depreciates in gold value more than commodities do liben. 1 think, a large increase in exports from here may be expected ; for, among other, items, European silks will be, to a great extent, superseded by those of Chius and Japan and full play will be given to the almost inlimited prodution of that erticle, of which the two latter countries are capable, to say of merchandise that are now shipped from this quarter of the world.

As the above figures explain the apparent want of response in exports from here to the declining rates of exchange, to they appear to indicate that notwithstanding the errible blows which have been dealt at ilver during the past year, that metal has not yet been lowered thereby in value compared with commodities. This really seems almost incredible, but other incredible results have been developed in connection with the unperalleled movement that has seen taking place in gold, and doubtless more will follow in the near future. When an analysis of Sauerbeck's tables for 1892, and a comparison of data from that source, with those so readily obtainable here, left no alternative but the conclusion set forth in my letter of the 6th of September last, published in your paper, viz, that all of the apparent decline in commodities and silver during the last 20 years had been occasioned by the appreciatained, probably, when the complete returns | tion of gold, and none of it by over-production, improved methods of transports meantime, it can be stated, that so far as tion, etc., etc., I must contess I was much the table above referred to sheds light surprised that figures seemed to demonupon the subject, there seems to be no con- strate with such precision results so clusive evidence to show that, up to the contrary to the almost universally received. end of 1898, the value of silver with reference opinions, and I could not at the time, find. outside those figures, any satisfactory ex-Taking 37 of the distinctly specified planation of such results; for it must be borne in mind that the production of com-
